

Contamination of health care personnel during removal of personal protective equipment.

January 22, 2016

Tomas ME, Kundrapu S, Thota P, et al. Contamination of Health Care Personnel During Removal of Personal Protective Equipment. JAMA Intern Med. 2015;175(12):1904-10.

doi:10.1001/jamainternmed.2015.4535.

<https://psnet.ahrq.gov/issue/contamination-health-care-personnel-during-removal-personal-protective-equipment>

Use of personal protective equipment is a cornerstone of health care–associated infection prevention. This simulation study identified significant contamination of health care personnel during removal of personal protective equipment and found that contamination decreased with training. These results emphasize the need for more training in the use of protective equipment and for design of improved equipment to prevent the spread of infections.