

Design and reliability of a specific instrument to evaluate patient safety for patients with acute myocardial infarction treated in a predefined care track: a retrospective patient record review study in a single tertiary hospital in the Netherlands.

April 5, 2017

Eindhoven DC, Borleffs JW, Dietz MF, et al. Design and reliability of a specific instrument to evaluate patient safety for patients with acute myocardial infarction treated in a predefined care track: a retrospective patient record review study in a single tertiary hospital in the.... BMJ Open. 2017;7(3):e014360. doi:10.1136/bmjopen-2016-014360.

<https://psnet.ahrq.gov/issue/design-and-reliability-specific-instrument-evaluate-patient-safety-patients-acute-myocardial>

Although adverse events among hospitalized patients are common, less is known about the safety of acute cardiac care. In this retrospective study, researchers described the development and validation of a tool to assess the safety of patients treated for acute myocardial infarction.