

Relationship between psychological safety and reporting nonadherence to a safety checklist.

April 18, 2018

Gilmartin HM, Langner P, Gokhale M, et al. Relationship Between Psychological Safety and Reporting Nonadherence to a Safety Checklist. J Nurs Care Qual. 2018;33(1):53-60.

doi:10.1097/NCQ.0000000000000265.

<https://psnet.ahrq.gov/issue/relationship-between-psychological-safety-and-reporting-nonadherence-safety-checklist>

In a robust safety culture, nurses and other health care workers feel comfortable reporting safety hazards without fear of repercussions. This study found no relationship between nurse-reported psychological safety and adherence to a central line insertion checklist in the Veterans Affairs system. A recent PSNet interview with Linda Aiken discussed what investments in the nursing workforce yield the biggest safety impacts.