

Patient errors in use of injectable antidiabetic medications: a need for improved clinic-based education.

November 4, 2020

Wei ET, Koh E, Kelly MS, et al. Patient errors in use of injectable antidiabetic medications: a need for improved clinic-based education. J Am Pharm Assoc (2003). 2020;60(5):e76-e80.

doi:10.1016/j.japh.2020.02.030.

<https://psnet.ahrq.gov/issue/patient-errors-use-injectable-antidiabetic-medications-need-improved-clinic-based-education>

Insulin is a high-risk medication that can lead to harm if administered incorrectly. This article describes four cases highlighting the importance of providing appropriate education on injectable antidiabetic medications, common diabetes-related medication errors in primary care, identifying patients who may be at high risk and ways to prevent these errors.